"Great choice for our Conference stay"

"My husband and I just visited Jekyll for a Conference. We stayed 4 nights in a studio villa. Perfect for 2 guests. We haven't stayed here in years and everything was definitely updated. The grounds are well kept, pool is very nice Our suite was very nice with a kitchen and sofa. Will definitely stay here again!"

The Goodsons

"Highly Recommend!"

"We stayed here due to the proximity to Driftwood Beach which is within walking distance. My mom, 2 sisters & I and were very comfortable. Easy access to the beach with chairs along the boardwalk & a gazebo to sit and watch the ocean. The kitchen was sufficiently furnished & the living room is spacious. It was very clean. The employee checking us in was very courteous & friendly. All in all, it was a wonderful experience that I would highly recommend."

K. Rhea

"This will always be my favorite location!"

"Having stayed a couple of places on the island, I finally found my perfect spot on the 4th try! Always book directly thru the Villas. All are privately owned but by booking directly you avoid the cleaning and booking fees that really jack up the price with AirBnbs. There is a lovely boardwalk with chairs and canopy. Very close to Driftwood Beach (a must see) and Pool area is nice as well. Rented a 2-berm (both upstairs) 1 1/2 bath and it was lovely!!!!"

Michelle C.

"Fantastic!"

"Enjoyed our vacation on Jekyll island while staying at Villas by the Sea. Staff was very helpful with any questions and our villa was perfectly clean. The kitchen area was well stocked with dishes, utensils and cleaning supplies. We took advantage of the guest laundry facilities and enjoyed relaxing on the gazebo after a day of fishing. We would love to stay here again."

Jekyll Island History

Jekyll Island, at 5,700 acres, is the smallest of Georgia's barrier islands. The Island is in Glynn County, just southeast of the city of Brunswick, south of St. Simons Island, and north of Cumberland Island. The western side of Jekyll Island is fronted by Jekyll Creek and salt marsh, and the eastern edge of the Island is defined by its beach and the Atlantic Ocean.

The natural environment of Jekyll Island is a magnolia-live oak forest canopy with a forest floor dominated by palmetto, scrub oak and Spanish moss. Animals found on the island include white-tailed deer, raccoons, turkeys, wild ducks, alligators, and songbirds. Tidal creeks and streams of the salt marsh provide a variety of resources, including seasonal fish and shellfish.

Jekyll Island has a diverse and significant history. The first occupants of the island were small groups of Native American hunter-gatherers, sometime around 2500 B.C. These groups appear to have been composed of small family units that settled on Jekyll Island on a seasonal basis. They produced fiber-tempered pottery vessels and lived on the abundant natural resources of the area. Archaeological evidence suggests that Jekyll seems to not have supported a long-term permanent settlement by any Aboriginal peoples, even though by 1000 B.C., Georgia's coastal natives had begun to collect in settlements with less seasonal migration and larger population numbers. As Native American culture advanced, little changed on Jekyll Island.

By A.D. 1540, the Georgia coast had become populated by the Guale Indians. The Guale extended from St. Catherines Island, south to Jekyll Island, where they gave way to the Timucuan groups to the south. The first European occupation of Jekyll Island may have taken place during the late sixteenth century. During that period, a chain of Spanish missions was established along the Georgia coast. The Spanish name for Jekyll Island was Isla de Ballenas, "Island of Whales," because of the abundance of white whales off the Island, in the Gray's Reef area. Although there is no evidence of the establishment of a mission on Jekyll Island, archaeological studies have shown a definable occupation by Native Americans during the period. There is strong archival evidence that the Spanish at least explored, and had contact with, native people on Jekyll Island during this period.

The year 1735 was a watershed moment for Jekyll Island. In 1733, James Oglethorpe and the passengers aboard the Anne had established the English colony of Georgia on Yamacraw Bluff, in present-day Savannah. The colony began to grow quickly, and an immediate conflict developed with the Spanish colony of Florida to the south. Feeling that the propriety and well-being of his colonists was being threatened, Oglethorpe began recruiting men from England to serve as soldiers in Georgia's defense. William Horton was one of the men who believed this adventure would suit him.

Jekyll Island History

Horton sailed for Georgia with other recruits and arrived in Savannah in February 1736. Oglethorpe quickly dispatched Horton and thirty other recruits to St. Simons Island to construct the town and defenses at Frederica. Under the leadership of Oglethorpe, Frederica began to take form. Horton was a key player in these events, and eventually was promoted to the rank of major and was placed in command of the troops garrisoned in the area. Horton was granted 500 acres of land by the Trustees of the colony, and in April 1736, he set out from Frederica to the neighboring Island of Jekyll to stake his claim. Jekyll had been named in honor of Sir Joseph Jekyll, a supporter of Oglethorpe's efforts to establish the colony of Georgia. By 1737, Horton had established residency on Jekyll Island, and began raising cattle. He died in 1748. The remains of his house, built of tabby, are among the oldest structures in Georgia.

Over the next forty years, Jekyll Island had a number of owners, including Raymond Demere, Clement Martin, and Richard Leake. In 1792, it was purchased by the Sapelo Company, which was made up of four French landowners, among them Christopher Poulain DuBignon. By 1800, the island was completely owned by DuBignon. He and his descendants were the principal owners of the Island until 1886, with agriculture as the primary activity on the island. Although the U.S. government had banned the importation of slaves in 1808, the smuggling of slaves continued. On November 29, 1858, during a storm, the Wanderer, owned by Savannah businessperson Charles Lamar, unloaded its cargo of 409 slaves on Jekyll Island. This was one of the last cargos of slaves imported into the United States.

Jekyll Island's proud history began in 1886, when the island was purchased by a group of wealthy families as a private retreat. By 1900, The Jekyll Island Club membership included the Rockefellers, Morgan, McCormick, Pulitzer, Vanderbilt, Cranes, and represented over one-sixth of the world's wealth. The Club closed in 1942 and Jekyll Island was purchased by the State of Georgia in 1947, and by law, 65% of the island was to remain undeveloped.

The State of Georgia purchased Jekyll Island from the remaining club members for $675,000. The purchase gave the public access to the beaches. For some, the island sale was a relief, as taxes were mounting and the only source of revenue for the club was an island timber-cutting contract. For others, the sale was a disappointment. Some members desired to revamp the club and construct a bridge to the island. Nevertheless, the sale still took place, and included the entire island. In 1979, the island area containing the clubhouse and cottages was designated a National Historic Landmark district by the Department of the Interior. Currently, the island is maintained by the Jekyll Island Authority, a self-sufficient entity created by the State of Georgia. The Jekyll Island Museum, and Authority division, is preserving the historic district for present and future generations.
